Public Until MacDonald
Is Advised

TIME BEING MARKED

Little of Importance Expected To Transpire Until Monday

LONDON, England, July 8.—A new message from President Roosevelt outlining the procedure of the American delegates before the World Economic Conference was received today by Secretary of State Hull. The message may not be made public until Hull has an opportunity to communicate its contents privately to Prime Minister MacDonald.

LONDON, England, July 8.—The World Economic Conference still posing on the brink of a precipice, was assured at least another week-end of life today as delegates split into private committees to survey the work and the pitfalls ahead. Little of importance is expected to transpire until 11.30 a. m., Monday, when the Conference Bureau or Steering Committee will meet to decide how the work can be continued.

Just before the bureau meets, the sub-committees dealing with the re-establishment of the international monetary standard, presided over by Senator Key Pittman of Nevada, will hold a session.

Members of the American delegation and the representatives anxious to keep the conference going at all costs, are hopeful that this committee session will serve to give the parley a new lease on life.

Gordon Defends His
Liquidation of Banks

PHILADELPHIA, July 8.—(INS)—Dr. William D. Gordon, state secretary of banking, in a statement today charged that the legislative committee investigating liquidation of closed banks was painting a "distorted" picture of the work of his department.

He offered figures which he said showed the work of liquidating closed institutions was being completed as efficiently and economically as possible and refused claims of the committee that the system of centralized control was highly extravagant.

"Our expense for liquidating the 142 closed banks totals $9,298,075 as against a total income of $11,347,714 from interests on loans and securities owned by the closed banks and rentals on real estate owned by them," Dr. Gordon reported, adding that a profit was being shown rather than a loss as charged by State Senator Harry Shapiro, a member of the probing body.

Mattern's Plane Smashed
But Flier Was Unhurt

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8.—(INS)—Jimmy Mattern's plane was smashed June 14 at an isolated point 80 miles west of Anadir, in Eastern Siberia, but Mattern was unhurt, according to a wireless message received today by the United States coast guard station here from the coast guard cutter Northland now in Siberian waters.

Commander S. V. Parker of the Northland, wireless the station here that he had received the following radio message from the radio station at Anadir:

"Flyer Mattern on June 14 met with accident 80 miles west of Anadir. His plane was crushed to pieces but he was not hurt. On July 5 Mattern was found and shipped to Anadir. He is here now."

The coast guard station here said it believed that the Northland was now proceeding under full steam toward Anadir.

June 14 was the date that Mattern, on his projected globe circling flight, hopped off from Khabarovsk for the perilous 2400 mile flight to Nome, Alaska, and the message indicated that he crashed shortly after leaving Khabarovsk. The Northland was endeavoring to learn the reason for the smash-up, and who located him and his wrecked airplane.

Mattern's plane was equipped with fishing tackle and a gun and during the time from June 14 until he was found he undoubtedly was able to provide himself with a meagre supply of food.

After he returned to Anadir it took Mattern's telegram two days to arrive in Moscow, advising that he was safe.

CHARGE MIS-USE OF FUNDS

Allentown, July 8.—Warrants were to be issued by the District Attorney's office today for several store-keepers and a number of employees of the County Relief Board on charges of mis-using food order certificates. The executive committee of the relief board charged the store-keepers had cashed in the food orders at full value, although they had been purchased from certain employees of the board at 60 per cent of their value. The Auditor General's Department at Harrisburg was asked to investigate the charges by the executive committee.

HOSIERY WORKERS STRIKE

Reading, July 8.—Virtually the entire hosiery industry of the Reading district was paralyzed today as more than 10,000 workers remained on strike for union recognition, awaiting the arrival of a Federal mediator, Dr. Benjamin Squires, the mediator who last Monday negotiated a strike-settling agreement that was almost immediately repudiated by both sides, was expected to return here Monday to make another attempt to compose differences between the strikers and the manufacturers.

MRS. MOODY WINS

Wimbledon, England, July 8.—Bowl-ing over unexpectedly heavy opposition, Mrs. Helen Wills-Moody won her sixth Wimbledon tennis title today equaling the record of Suzanne Leng-len of France.

INDUSTRY STILL GAINS

Pittsburgh, July 8.—Pennsylvania industries ended its first week of the second half of the business year today with still further gain made in all sections of the state. Steel production has shown remarkably steady in-creases in volume at a time when or-ders are usually falling off. As a re-sult steel is averaging 50 per cent in the western section while in the east operations have jumped to 40 per cent of capacity. For the first time in several months, steel plants in the East have been able to break even or show a profit in operating.

READING COMPANY TO ABANDON 2 BUS LINES

To Discontinue Routes From Jenkintown to New Hope and
New Hope to Doylestown

WILL END SEPTEMBER 23

PHILADELPHIA, July 8.—(INS)—The Public Service Commission today had before it for consideration the application of the Reading Transportation Company, bus operating subsidiary of the Reading Company, for permission to abandon two bus lines in the North Penn and York road sec-tions.

Russell Wolfe, a commission exam-iner, heard testimony in the case late yesterday afternoon. The lines proposed for abandonment extend be-tween Jenkintown and New Hope and Doylestown and New Hope.

E. D. Osterhout, traffic manager for the bus company, testified the Jenkin-town line was operated at a loss of $4535 last year and that the other line is losing heavily because of a de-crease in traffic.

Osterhout said the company had de-cided to continue operation of the Doylestown-Lansdale bus route until September 23 with the hope that busi-ness will increase.

Benjamin M. Gfemel and George M. Winthrop, both of Hartsville, protested abandonment of the lines. Such action, they testified, will leave that section without adequate transportation facili-ties.

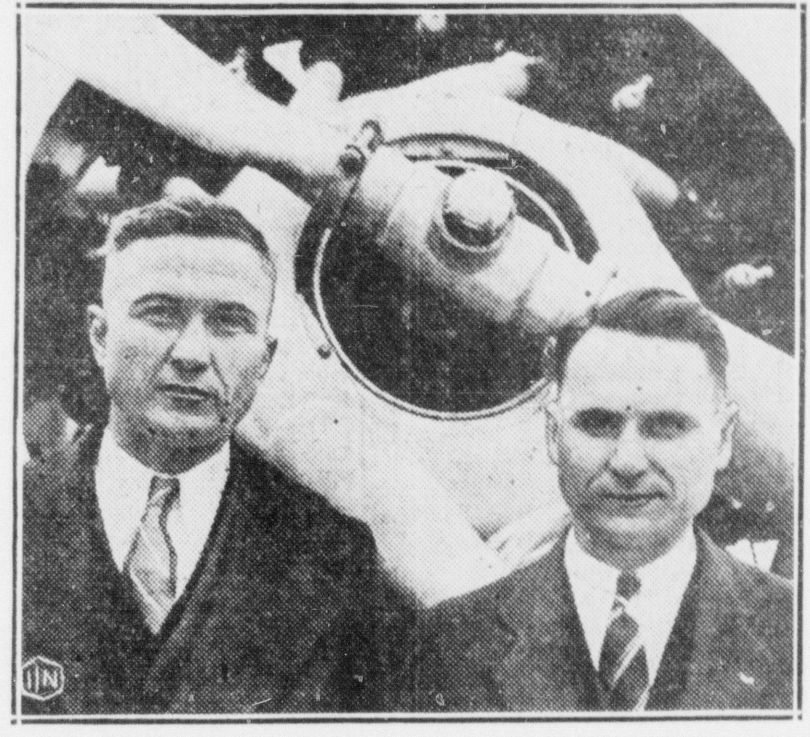

PEACH FESTIVAL TODAY

EDGELY EASILY WINS
OVER ST. ANN'S NINE

Rolls Up Greatest Number of Hits Scored This Season

FINAL SCORE IS 20 TO 3

BRISTOL TWILIGHT LEAGUE
Result of last night's game
EDGELY, 20; ST. ANN'S, 3

Rolling up the greatest number of runs scored this season, the Edgely A. C. chalked up an easy victory over the St. Ann's A. A. last night on the "Salts" field. The score ended 20-3.

The winners made a total of sixteen hits and were aided by nine St. Ann's miscues. The winners started with eight runs in the first and only in the third inning did the losers succeed in stopping the Edgely team from scoring and then it was only momen-tarily as the Edgelyites came back with three more tallies the following frame.

"Pomp" Piazza slammed a home run in the sixth inning with the sacks loaded. "Herb" Banes banged out a triple with two runners on in the fourth. Leinheiser and Piazza were credited with four hits in five times up while Fields had three out of four.

For St. Ann's, Pieo fielded nicely and with the stick drew two passes and hit safely in three times to the plate.

Bristol Man Dies Of Injuries In Accident

The death of Samuel G. Gilkeson, Bristol, Thursday night at the Grand View Hospital, Sellersville, resulted from injuries suffered when a trolley hit the truck Gilkeson was operating, June 29, at the Three Mile Run grade crossing of the Lehigh Valley Traction Company lines.

Gilkeson had been in critical condi-tion since the crash. His injuries were: a fractured skull, spinal com-pression, severe cuts of arms and body, body bruises and a fracture of the left hand.

The victim only escaped almost in-stant death when he was thrown from the truck. The heavy vehicle, used for hauling stones, burst into flames fol-lowing the crash and was destroyed.

John Ward, of Allentown, operator of the trolley, stated following the crash that he was unable to stop his car in time to avoid the crash.

Ward was not injured, but the trol-ley was damaged and several passen-gers were shaken up.

RIVER COMMERCE HERE
SHOWS BIG DECREASE

3,009,147 Tons of Freight
Moved To and From Points
On Upper Delaware

BRISTOL, 780,342 TONS

Commerce of the Delaware River showed a further decline in 1932, as compared with 1931 and the peak year of 1930, as shown by the annual re-ports of waterborne commerce recent-ly submitted by Colonel Earl I. Brown, district engineer, in charge of river and harbor improvements, Philadel-phia district.

There were 3,009,147 tons of freight, valued at $11,484,144 moved to and from points on the upper section of the river between Allegheny avenue, Philadelphia, to Trenton, N. J.,—32.7 per cent less in volume, and 25.7 per cent less in value, than in 1931, due to a decline in sand and gravel trade.

Following is the volume in short tons to and from the various localities on the upper Delaware river:

Trenton, 170,737; Bordentown and vicinity, 4,043; Burlington, Florence and Roebling, 199,647; Palmyra, Riverton, Riverside and Beverly, 554,128; Delair, 23,782; Bristol and vicinity, 780,342.

Sanity Questioned

PROFITABLE AFTERNOON
SPENT BY GARDENERS

Entomologist Gives Much
Information To Club
Garden Section

AT LANDRETH HOME

A very profitable afternoon was en-gaged in yesterday by members of the Garden Section, Bristol Travel Club, at the home of Mrs. S. Phillips Land-reth, Pine Grove, when Mr. Burdette, of the New Jersey State Experiment Station, New Brunswick, N. J., spoke.

Mr. Burdette, an entomologist, told the women of the two classes of bugs which are very familiar to gardeners—the kind that pinches or chews the plants, and the other class which sucks the juices. The women were told that bugs would become so nu-merous in a short time if it were not for winds and rain that the country would be overrun with them. The sec-tion to which parasites have been dis-patched to destroy the Japanese beetles is enlarging stated the speaker.

"We have the good news that the beetles will in time be as few as the old-time potato bug," he added.

Specimens of plants, shrubs and trees taken to the meeting by the members were examined for rust, scale, etc., and Mr. Burdette obligingly informed as to cause, when to spray and what formula to use. In some in-stances it is necessary to spray as early as February, long before the leaves arrive, he told.

Any questions relative to plants, in-sects, etc., addressed to the experi-ment station in New Brunswick, will be readily answered the meeting was informed.

In response to roll call each mem-ber responded by naming her favorite flower for July, giving the botanical name, and telling of the kind of soil in which it grows.

An appropriate selection, "Wonder-ful Gardens" was read by Mrs. Emil Metzger.

The August meeting, on the fourth, will be at the home of Mrs. Armand V. Morris, Radcliffe street.

Arrest Four For Stealing
Chickens; Fowls Found

Two colored men and two white men were taken into custody this morn-ing by Officers Ferry and Nichols on sus-picion of stealing chickens.

The men were found in the two shacks located at 825 and 827 Lake street. The chickens were also found in the houses. Three had been killed and dressed while the head of a fourth was also found.

The chickens were identified as the property of Mr. Foster, Pine street. The fowls were stolen last night, ac-cording to Foster.

The men under arrest are Arthur Brown, R. Darrah, colored; George Green and "Pussy" Campbell, white.

Foster reported the theft of the chickens to the police and shortly afterwards the arrests were made. The chickens were identified by marking bands which Foster used.

Brown and Darrah have been ar-rested before for chicken stealing, the police one time finding the men stewing the fowls which they had stolen.

All of the men were under the in-fluence of liquor.

PORCH OF AUNT

Joseph Donus So Informs District Attorney Arthur
M. Eastburn

CHARGES ARE DROPPED

Charges of Non-Support Are Dropped Against The Husband

PARKLAND, July 8.—The alleged kidnapping of two children here on Thursday afternoon has proven to be nothing more than an episode in a domestic quarrel between man and wife.

Joseph Donus, father of Joseph and John Donus, 8 and 10 years old, re-spectively, who were whisked away from the home of their aunt, Thurs-day, are now in the custody of their father. The latter telephoned to Dis-trict Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, at Doylestown, yesterday, and said the children were safe.

Attorney Eastburn ordered Justice of the Peace Keating at South Lan-gorne to stop service of a warrant sworn out against Donus by his wife on a non-support charge. The prose-cutor said he had information that nullified the warrant.

Donus and his wife have been living apart for about a week, but have not been legally separated. It was first be-lieved that the boys had been kid-napped.

Federal Agents Guard
Witnesses At Chester

CHESTER, Pa., July 8.—(INS)—De-partment of Justice agents from Phila-delphia and Washington today were guarding the Government's star wit-nesses whose testimony resulted in the Federal Grand Jury indictment of 96 persons, including State Senator John J. McClure, on charges of conspiracy against the prohibition laws.

The agents were ordered into the county following reports that a reign of terror was to be launched to inti-midate the witnesses, two of whom were beaten up yesterday by a former fight-er, an ex-employee of Chester's no-torious Fourth Ward Republican Club.

Several witnesses have reported to Clet A. Keyes, special assistant U. S. attorney general prosecuting the case, that they have been threatened with being "put on the spot" unless they re-tracted their testimony.

The two men beaten up yesterday were Charles Altschuler, local store-keeper, and Edward Brunner. They were attacked, they said, by Ollie Ball, 33, who called them "dirty rats" and "squealers."

Sellersville Plant To Resume Operations Soon

SELLERSVILLE, July 8.—Another sign that business is looking up was the reopening today of the former Bucks County pants factory by the Penn Pants Company, of Reading. The building is located at Maple avenue and Lawn avenue, this borough.

G. A. Valerius, Reading, will super-vise the new plant. He says he ex-pects to have eighty machines install-ed within a few days.

The plant has been idle since last Fall. Nearly a week was required to clean and renovate it. Men started in-stalling machinery on the third floor last week. Mr. Valerius states that nearly all the machines will be new. Later he expects to have eighty more machines put on the second floor and, if business warrants it, the same num-ber will be put on the ground floor.

Asked for a statement about the con-dition of the clothing industry, Mr. Valerius remarked: "Very good, or rather—I should say pretty good." He was very optimistic about the pros-pects in Sellersville, feeling that there is much room for expansion.

A number of former employees of the Bucks County Pants Company have already been signed up and within about two or three weeks there will probably be work for nearly 100.

The Penn Pants Company employs from 350 to 400 hands

HOPELESS, SAYS GIBSON

Few Americans are better informed on political conditions in Europe than is Hugh S. Gibson. Mr. Gibson is the retiring ambassador to Belgium. He has just returned to the United States to become ambassador to Brazil.

He was the American observer at the disarmament conference. In this and his other official capacities, he has been in a position to keep himself well posted concerning general conditions.

When he says, therefore, that "unofficial ambassadors" of the United States chiefly are responsible for the opinion of Europe that America does not expect payment of the war debts, he deserves to be taken seriously. He went even further in an interview in New York and said this country had as well give up the idea of getting any more money from Europe. He explained that by "unofficial ambassadors" he meant prominent Americans traveling abroad.

Such Americans, of course, have a right to talk and to express their views on international questions. And there probably is no way to stop them, however desirable this might be from the standpoint of the best interests of America.

Still more important was the ambassador's statement that, in his belief, no further debt payments would be made to the United States.

If this view be correct, it either means cancellations or default. The former is improbable. Some of the nations already have defaulted on their installments, and these, in all likelihood, are ready to go the whole way and default on their entire obligations. Those that have kept up their payments, however, including Great Britain, although not paying the last installment in full, have by their action indicated a disinclination to default. These, at the same time, no doubt expect the United States to make material reductions in the amounts due.

Whoever may be responsible for Europe's disinclination to pay is a little beside the point now. Whether they will pay and when is the big question.

LOWER POSTAGE RATES

The Postmaster General, under authority of Congress, has ordered restoration on July 1 of the two-cent postage rate on letters for local delivery.

This action is taken in the hope that it will result in increased business. A survey had revealed what officials interpreted as evidence that the three-cent rate, instead of bringing in more revenue, had had the opposite effect. In other words, it represented a higher charge than the traffic would bear. Fewer letters were mailed because of the increased rate.

On this principle, it would seem that it would pay to restore the two-cent rate on all letters mailed, both for local and out-of-town delivery. The department, however, apparently wishes to test out its theory before abandoning the three-cent charge entirely. It is not improbable that the results may cause it to restore the old rates all along the line.

At any rate these two years have taught us that you can't save a country by giving the older fellow from advice.

CHAPTER XLIII

Maisie went grumbling away. Not for worlds would she let Joan know she was worried... terribly worried... Joan. Surely Joan wouldn't do anything wrong... it couldn't be that... and she didn't drink. There was no stale smell of gin in the room... Maisie shuddered. She remembered that small... Fanny.

"I guess I've had my share of trouble," she told the coffee pot. "Oh well... I only hope everything's all right with Joan. I don't like it..."

"You'd better phone Fanny," she said, still in the brusque, scolding tone she used to cover her emotion, "and tell her I overleap, and you're going to be good and late. Fanny's never anywhere on time herself but I know how she is if anybody else is late."

"Yes," Joan said decisively. She looked more natural now that she was bathed and dressed for the day. And certainly she had not been crying. That was one good sign. Or Maisie thought it was until she remembered that she had never cried in the old days, when she was eating her heart out for that secondhand Bill.

"You'd better call her now," Maisie repeated severely. "All right."

But it was Curtis's number she called when Maisie had gone bustling down the back stairs to complain about the garbage can again. "The rent I pay for this place, and the service I get... worse than a tenement in Turbat. Let me catch that man now. I'll give him a piece of my mind that'll..."

Maisie's voice rumbling down the stairs, and at the telephone, Joan's small and timid, like a child's. "Curtis, this is Joan. I'm sorry if I disturbed you... I just remembered that it is the Cunningham's dinner dance tonight. Could you tell them I'm ill, please, Curtis? Oh no, to please don't ask me. I couldn't face them. I couldn't... All right, if you think it is best... Yes, I'll manage, somehow."

So she had to go, because people would think it queer if she didn't. She'd have to go, and dance and smile, and laugh and talk to Curtis, as if nothing had happened... because... because he hadn't made up his mind.

"Oh, make him decide soon... make him... make him..." It was her little prayer, that she repeated under her breath all the long day.

"I can't go—I can't—I can't." But she knew she could. "I can do anything," she thought with a strange, detached admiration of her own calm. "I even danced with Bill without screaming... and if I can do that... I can do anything."

The orchestra was playing when they came in, Joan and Curtis together, for the last time, surely for the last time... he wouldn't expect her to do it again...

"Hello, Joan!" "Hello, Curtis!" "Joan, the next dance with me!" The same words, the same people, the same motions... One part of her was alive to them, one part of her was smiling, and answered them, ate snails and little green peas... and one part was dead... not seeing, not hearing, not feeling... dead, dead.

"Curtis is off his oats tonight," Eugenia said.

Mollie Davis looked and laughed. "No, that's just his regular face. Wooden, I call him. I never could see what you saw in him myself."

"I like that! He was never anything in my life—just a family friend."

"Look at him mooning at the Hastings girl. If you ask me she carries that Lily Maid of Astolat stuff too far. She looks like something washed up by the tide—"

"Mollie!"

"Well, she does. Did you ever see anything the way he keeps looking at her? He hasn't taken his eyes off her once all evening."

Mollie was right, he hadn't.

He couldn't. When he took her hand to dance with her it burned him coldly, like ice. He was repelled and attracted and torn a dozen ways at once. He saw her white beauty, clear and clean and virginal. Her pathetic childish lips, scarlet in the white of her face. Her deep gray-green eyes, the color of troubled waters, half hidden by the long golden lashes, just deeper than the gold of her hair. Her dear, curly hair that glinted like a halo, a halo of goodness...

And then he'd see her dancing, someone else's arms about her. Someone holding her close, someone whispering to her, loving her perhaps... Good God—what if that were the man... it might be... It might be someone he met every day of his life... someone who would take his hand and congratulate him, with his tongue in his cheek. "Lucky boy, Barstow!" Luck boy—getting the girl I love...

He'd wipe his damp forehead... that couldn't go on. Dependable to go through life, wondering that way. Better never to see her again. Never to see her... to let her go forever? Joan with the skin like velvet, the sweet red lips... Impossible to leave her... to give her up now... with the wedding date set, and the plans all made...

"I'm going crazy—Crazy!" he thought desperately.

And when the grief was at its height, and the music was mounting to its height of abandon, when she was dancing, laughingly, with Bert

She stopped and sighed. Miserable to have to break it now, and still... and still... to have him to herself again... how heavenly that would be...

"But we didn't quarrel," Joan said.

"Well..."

The next day she began all over again, telephoning to Joan bright and early, at the shop. "Joan? This is Mrs. Barstow. You haven't heard from Curtis? I can't understand it. Really, I think you are keeping something from me. Do you think that is fair, my dear? Don't you think that as his mother I am entitled to some consideration, some confidence? What's that?... I can't hear you?... You haven't heard at all? Well, do get in touch with me when you do. I'm wiring Baker's in Seattle. I don't know why he doesn't write..."

Baker's reported briefly and collected that Mr. Barstow had not as yet called at their office.

"For heaven's sake, let us get out of here," Curtis said.

Cunningham, he brought her her coat. "For heaven's sake, let us get out of here," he said.

Lyla Barstow set down her tea-cup with a little tinkling sound. "But he must have said something," she said. "It isn't like Curtis to go off without a word!"

"No, he didn't. I didn't see him at all," Joan repeated dully. She had been repeating it for half an hour, but still the question went on.

"Yes, but he wouldn't have gone all the way to Seattle to finish that case alone. Mr. Kennedy himself said it wasn't necessary. He didn't know why Curtis went, and I'm sure I can't understand it. Why should he get on the train so suddenly, and take that long miserable trip when a few telegrams, or even a telephone conversation would have done as well?"

"I don't know, Mrs. Barstow." "Nonsense—of course, you know. He wouldn't have gone off that way without some reason. You are sure you didn't quarrel, Joan?"

"No, we didn't quarrel."

"Not that there would be any excuse for quarreling with Curtis. There never was anyone so easy to get along with as he. Joan, I don't want to hurt you, but have you understood Curtis? He hasn't been himself since—since this engagement. My dear, do you think you will make him happy? Wouldn't it be better—"

Joan just twisted her handkerchief in her hands.

"You see what I mean. If you can't get along, surely it is better to admit it now. Much as I'd hate to see it broken..."

Curtis had no intention of calling at Baker's. As Kennedy said, the work there was finished. He simply went because he had to go somewhere, and it was the first place that occurred to him. He had to get away from Joan and San Francisco. Had to get away to think...

And besides—there was Blanche. It was lonely in the hotel, lonely and quiet. Too rainy and dismal to walk in the parks. He couldn't think any better here than he could home... he was a fool to have come...

He went down to the desk to see about a ticket home. No, he wasn't ready to go back yet. Not for a little while. He'd run out and see Blanche, Blanche would be home...

Blanche had housekeeping rooms in an old house way out on Fifth Street. It was amusing what Blanche had accomplished with a few yards of yellow chintz, and a can of green paint. Blanche was a great housekeeper, and a great cook. He got to thinking about her chicken with mushrooms and garlic, Italian style, and a big dish of spaghetti on the side... that, and a couple of bottles of beer...

"Sure!" she said when he telephoned. "Bring the chicken, and I'll get busy on it. I got six bottles of good beer Ferri brought in on the last trip... No, he ain't in port now, not until the 22nd. Gee, I'm glad you're in town. I was kinda lonesome. Gloria has been talking about you, too. Only this morning she said to me, 'Mamma, why don't Uncle Curt come no more?'—the poor kid, she likes you!"

CHAPTER XLIV

So Curtis came.

Blanche put both arms around him, and kissed him soundly. "I am glad to see you—what's the matter with your old firm that they don't send you up here any more? You're a stranger..."

That was the nicest thing about Blanche—her warm sincerity. She was a big girl, with cheeks like apples, and a wide, welcoming smile. There was something fresh and wholesome about her.

Curtis was fond of Gloria. She was a spindly little thing with large pale blue eyes, and fuzzy yellow hair that Blanche curled every day on the iron. "Some would have a permanent wave put in, but I think too much of my child's future for that! I don't care how long it takes me to do it, I curl it all by hand."

Yes, Blanche was a good mother according to her lights. She sent Gloria to Sunday School every Sunday, and washed her mouth out with soap if she heard her say a bad word. "You never got that from me!" she'd storm. "I'll teach you to use bad words, you naughty, naughty girl!"

"I intend to send her to a good school," she told Curtis every time he came North, but she put it off. It would be lonely without her, and Ferri would feel badly when he came home and she wasn't there.

It had been months since Curtis had seen them. Pleasant to be back again. Pleasant to eat Blanche's delicious spaghetti, and hold pale little Gloria on his knee.

She put her thin little arm around his neck, and showed him the bright little picture cards she had got in Sunday School. "And this is Moses, when he was a little baby. The queen found him in a basket... and this one is the Good Shepherd looking for the little lamb that got lost."

A lump rose in Curtis's throat... poor little kid. He thought of Joan where he was. He thought of another little girl who he might someday hold on his knee. He hurriedly set Gloria down. "I'll have to be getting along, Blanche..."

"Why, Curtis?" Her bright face clouded. "Why—surely..."

Then he thought of Joan again... what she had done to him... all his hopes and dreams in the dust...

"Oh, killed by her hand..."

"Oh, all right," he said. "I'll stay."

He stayed two days. He bought a blue broadcloth coat with a dimming blue squirrel collar for Gloria. The blue just matched her eyes. He felt almost happy for a moment when she put her thin little arms tight around his neck and squeezed him—"Dear Uncle Curt!"

"You shouldn't have!" Blanche scolded affectionately. "Still it does look sweet on her. Turn around, Lovey, and let Mamma see the back. Ain't you the proud baby? Curt, if I've told you once, I've told you twenty times, I'm no gold-digger, you don't have to go and spend all your money... I declare I never saw a fellow as crazy about kids as you are. You ought to get married and have about six yourself!"

The hot tears stung his eyes. Blanche understood him. Blanche appreciated him. She knew all he would do for the girl he married, how generous he would be, how kind... All he would have done for Joan... if she hadn't spoiled it... wrecked his life...

Sometimes he almost hated her. All those months, knowing that he loved her, knowing that he expected to marry her, and not telling, not telling until now... the eleventh hour...

Once he decided not to go home at all. He would write Joan telling her the situation had become impossible. Get a leave of absence from the firm. Travel for a year or so. Begin again. Find another girl eventually...

But it wasn't any use, he couldn't forget her. She would haunt him always. He hadn't found forgetfulness with Blanche. He wouldn't be able to find it in travel. There would always be Joan, drawing him back, beckoning to him across the distance. When he closed his eyes he could see her, her delicate white face, her appealing, gray-green eyes...

He couldn't be happy with her now, she had made that impossible, but neither could he be happy without her. Might as well go back, and see her again, talk to her...

So he came back.

He came to Maisie's flat in the evening, after the dishes were done. Maisie was stitching on the lunch-cloth, determined not to "let on" that she knew anything was wrong. Joan was sitting in a corner reading a book. Reading the same thing over and over, not conscious of a word on the printed page.

When Maisie saw him at the door she snatched her old coat off the hook on the back porch, and hurried down the back stairs to Miss Harvey's. They didn't even know she had gone.

"Curtis!" Joan whispered. "You've—come back!"

"Yes," he said huskily. "I've come back. I couldn't stay away. I love you, Joan—I love you..."

He held her close, so close that he could feel her heart beating against his. She was so pathetically glad to see him. She put out her slim, cool hand and touched his cheek. "I missed you terribly," she said. "I'm so glad you've come back." And then, "Have you—decided?" she asked, very low.

No pleading in her voice, no humility—just the question—"Have you decided?"

He hadn't expected something different. He didn't know what. Tears perhaps, supplication... certainly not that cool question, when he had hardly got into the room, hardly kissed her...

He felt his heart hardening, ever so slightly, against her. Didn't she realize all he had suffered? All the suffering she had brought upon him?

"Why couldn't you let me have one moment of

A Series of Open Letters to Bank Depositors

LETTER No. 4

Many bank customers have small balances and are served at an actual loss to the bank, because the income to be derived from the use of these small accounts, after allowing for the necessary cash reserve, is far too small to cover the costs of bookkeeping, stationery, supplies and clerical work.

The graded service charge, or a larger balance, is the only solution, and in this policy, which has been adopted by over two thousand banks in the United States, the depositor has shown a willingness to co-operate, upon recognizing the fundamental soundness of the request that an account should be maintained in such manner as to pay its way.

Such charge does not apply to savings accounts upon which checks are not drawn, nor to the accounts of fraternal, religious, community or philanthropic organizations.

TO PLAY BENEFIT GAME FOR CROYDON CADETS

For the benefit of Croydon Cadets, Bristol Park A. A. and Croydon Y. M. A. will engage in a double bill tomorrow. The first game will be played on the Y. M. A. grounds, State road and Emille avenue, and will start at 12 o'clock. The second game will start immediately after the first is finished and will be played on the Park field, Oak avenue and State road. The Cadets will parade and give exhibitions before the games.

The two clubs have been rivals since the season began, and both are in the midst of a winning streak. Park A. A. lost its first eight games and then started to win in regular form. The Y. M. A. has been off and on all season and seems to have struck its stride at last.

The entire proceeds of the games will go towards paying for the uniforms purchased by the Croydon Veterans of Foreign Wars Cadets.

Tomorrow afternoon on the Emille grounds, Howard Black's Emille A. A. will meet the Collington A. A., of Philadelphia.

Emille played a 5-5 tie with the Dixie Stars last week when interference with the fray, so their winning streak of six straight games remains unbroken.

"The" Watson will do the hurrying for the Emille club with Bruce doing the receiving. Leigh will be on first; Schoenfeld, second; Rockhill, short; and Comly, third.

The game will begin at 2:30 o'clock.

On St. Ann's field, the battle for the independent championship of Bristol will take place, Washington A. A. meeting the Young Italians.

Washington A. A. is a newly-organized team and has been winning in fine fashion. The Young Italians have been beating the teams in Bristol and vicinity and have scored victories over several teams of the Twilight and Suburban leagues.

On the mound, will use Antonelli on the mound, with Gallone doing the catching, Narcisi will pitch for the Italians, with Angelo catching.

This fray will begin at two o'clock.

On St. Ann's field tomorrow evening at six o'clock, the Jefferson A. C. will meet the Thirty-Fourth Ward of Philadelphia.

On the Edgely field tomorrow afternoon, Edgely A. C., of the Bristol Twilight League will play the Independents, of the same circuit. The fray is not a league contest but will be played for the benefit of an injured Edgely player.

PAY UP—CHEER UP!

OUR SMALL LOAN SERVICE WILL HELP YOU DO BOTH

Often when persons begin to feel a little "blue" over their financial affairs, they take courage and "come through" if they can get temporary assistance.

"The business man may secure a loan from a bank to pay his debtors and "ride him over" until he is able to "get on his feet again." This loan helps him greatly and he is soon in a position to repay the bank.

Likewise a small loan to house-holders is the means of helping them meet an emergency, calling for money to pay bills, rent, taxes, and interest on their home, building and loan dues, for sickness, and other needs.

ODD FELLOWS DEFEAT LANGHORNE BY ONE RUN

LOWER BUCKS COUNTY LEAGUE

Last Night's Results

ODD FELLOWS, 5; LANGHORNE, 4

The Odd Fellows went into a deadlock for the first time in the Lower Bucks County League by defeating the Langhorne Colored Giants last night on the Emille field. Final score was 5-4. Hulmeville A. A. is now sharing first place with the Odd Fellows.

The colored team rallied in the last two frames and pushed three runs across, two in the fifth and one in the sixth. The rally was cut short in the last inning when Ashby bore down and retired the last batter with the tying run on base.

The Odd Fellows' "cripples" won the game for their club. "Dutch" Afflerbach and Turner Ashby who were injured against Parkland, starred in the victory. Dutch made three hits and Ashby two. Ashby's triple in the third scored Purcell and the Odd Fellows' twirler scored himself with what proved to be the deciding tally.

Hibernians Lose Game To Burlington Nine, 6-5

The Hibernians, champions of the first half of the Lower Bucks County League, lost a heart-breaking game to the All-Saints, of Burlington, last night, on Sullivan's field, when the Jersey club scored two runs on an error to nose out the locals, 6-5.

It was a palpable miff of a fly by Gene Dugan which sent the Hibs down to defeat. The miff came in the sixth inning. Lyczak, the first hitter, had fled out. Downing drew a pass. P. Pitko singled and so did Joe Pitko. The latter's hit scored Downing. Shoal went out. Lawler to Foster, advancing the runners. Cook lifted an easy fly to right which Dugan dropped after bucketing the catch, both runners scoring on the play. Kelestyn rolled out, Gleason to Foster.

It was not Cliff Foster's fault that the resident team lost, as fault pointed out five hits from the delivery of Downing who twirls for Beverly Road in the Burlington City League. The Hibs made twelve blows but could only bunch them enough to score five runs. In the third, doubles by Foster and Gleason and singles by Thompson and Sullivan produced three tallies. Another came in the fourth when McGinley singled, was sacrificed by Lawler and scored on Foster's hit. Foster also drove in McGinley to score the fifth tally.

The Jersey club made eight hits, Joe Pitko leading with two doubles. Four of the eight blows came in the fourth when three tallies were marked up for the visitors.

FIGHT POTATO BLIGHT

PORT COLLINS, Colo.—(INS)—The entomology department of the Colorado Agricultural college here recently launched a widespread attack on "purple top" or psyllid blight of potatoes, said to have caused $2,500,000 damage in the state last year. A large power sprayer, mounted on a truck, is now used where psyllid outbreaks occurred.

ADOPT FIRE PETS

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah—(INS)—"Spark" and "Tinder," kittens whose only home was destroyed when fire swept through a local grocery market, have been adopted as official mascots by the Salt Lake City fire department. They were rescued and revived by Special Officer Walter L. Koch after the parent and one sister perished in the blaze.

ALSO KILLS DOGS

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.—(INS)—Coyote poisoning by the United States Biological survey is resulting in the killing of many valuable hunting dogs in New Mexico, Elliott Barker, state game warden, declared here recently. Barker said that, as a result, mountain lions and bobcats were increasing in number.

HOLLYWOOD. Siren types used to be plentiful in Hollywood, but, to hear Fox, there's an acute shortage just now.

After a two month's search, they have signed Carole Lombard to play the lead in "The Worst Woman in Paris."

The filling of this part has given the studio more grief than selecting the complete cast of any two normal pictures. Almost every actress in Hollywood has been under consideration at one time or another.

First it was Jean Harlow, then it was Myrna Loy, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer wouldn't loan its platinum-haired sensation and Myrna took sick just before the picture was supposed to start. Between-times, attempts had been made to sign up Tallulah Bankhead, Claudette Colbert, Kay Francis and Anna Dvorak.

Even Mary Astor, who is scarcely a siren type, was once mentioned for the role.

Director Monta Bell is keeping firmly hoping that Carole will pray her health, so he can start the cameras grinding at last.

HOLLYWOOD PARADE:

Quaint are the ways of picture-making. The other day Warner took a troupe ("Wild Boys of the Road") over to photograph scenes in an actual hobo "jungle." The real wayfarers objected, so they were paid $1 to stay out of the way. Then a group of Hollywood extras (some getting $5 a day) stepped in and played the scene.

There's much talk out here over La Garbo's increasingly frequent public appearances. In company with Rouben Mamoulian, she made her latest the other night at the Long Beach preview of "Berkeley Square."

Ruth Selwyn is not away from Hollywood because of any marital rift, says Edgar Selwyn, but to get acting experience in a Spring Lake (New Jersey) stock company. She's playing second leads in support of Katherine Alexander.

Katherine Alexander says she will be returning to Hollywood before long. Here's one that caught me.
